North Face (The Everest Files)

Most people - and with them I in the earlier epochs of my life - take the surrounding world and the prevailing conditions as something given, axiomatic, almost unalterable, upon whose origin one thinks but little, and upon making any possible change in it not at all. As the air is here for breathing, and one is not called upon to make any change in it, so the given social order - political and moral - is here to furnish the atmosphere, the vital air, of our social existence. This project addresses a key knowledge gap for Antarctic biota by genetically assessing responses of 6 flighted seabird species to past climate change, and combining these with inferences already made for penguins and seals in a meta-analysis.
